Managing Absenteeism

A TXT message service is part of the solution to the following parents questions: "Can I be sure that my child is at school? And if they aren't will I be told?"

Ideally a parent would be rung as soon as it was known that the student was absent.

With options of home, work and mobile numbers, it will often take more than two phone calls to contact a parent. This is not only time consuming, but also expensive. Parents may not answer a call when in meetings.

A simple TXT message will go directly and discretely to the parents mobile phones, usually in their pocket or purse. This will usually result in an immediate response by return TXT or phone call, even when in meetings.

The benefit to the school is a fast and simple service, taking seconds rather than minutes to complete.

The benefit to the parent is confidence in both the school and that they will be contacted.

This is not to say that TXT messaging is a total answer to managing absenteeism. Instead it can be an ideal starting point to the communication chain.

Additionally, TXT can also be useful in other circumstances during the day such as sick bay advice, meeting requests or reminders, contacting staff and locating relievers.

Managing Sports Teams

Managing sporting teams can take an exceptional amount of time, with practices, car pooling, games, venue and time alterations, changeable weather and parent involvement.

Imagine the ease of sending a message to the whole team, including parents, in less than a minute! This can happen whether you are near the Coretalk PC or on the way to a venue. The team can be managed from anywhere at any time.

Sports teams have been using this system during the past winter season. Parents and team members found the system to be simple and effective. Venue changes and cancellations were handled with ease and the teams were always where they needed to be!!
